Supply Chain Management Career Focus

Did you know that Supply Chain Managers in the United States take home approximately $79K annually on average? In the world of Supply Chain Managers, overall cash earnings stretch from $49K near the bottom to $121K near the top; these packages encompass bonuses that run close to $16K and profit sharing that can (albeit rarely) exceed $15K, along with commissions approaching $20K. The most important factor affecting compensation for this group is the specific employer, followed by geography and experience level. Job satisfaction is reported as high by the vast majority of workers. Most report receiving medical coverage from their employers and a large number collect dental insurance. Making up 73 percent of those who took the survey, male Supply Chain Managers greatly outnumber their female counterparts.

Additionally, Supply Chain Managers' salaries may rise greatly for those who assume a higher-end position such as a VP of Supply Chain Management. The average VP of Supply Chain Management brings home $165K per year. Supply Chain Managers most often move into positions as Directors of Supply Chain Management or Senior Supply Chain Managers; those groups report median salaries that are $41K higher and $37K higher, respectively.

Preparing Students for Career Success

ACBSP Candidacy update: The Division of Business and Economic Development is in the candidacy stage in pursuit of accreditation by the Accreditation Council for Business Schools and Programs (ACBSP). LOC business faculty are picking up the pace! Throughout the summer, business faculty and staff will be working to complete the many standards recognized and exhibited by ACBSP members. To that end, continued work in completing self-study submissions and evaluations will not, by any means, be a small charge. In short, performance indicators must be explained in detail as to assessing student outcomes as well as the administrative structure prescribed in LOC’s business program’s curriculum.

Kudos to the LOC Division of Business and Economics' Faculty and Staff!

ACBSP Accreditation Process

The ACBSP accreditation process begins with an application for candidacy and culminates in the submission and evaluation of programs’ self-studies. It can take up to two and a half years for schools to achieve initial program accreditation through ACBSP. Initial ACBSP program accreditation is valid for 10 years. ACBSP accredits academic programs and not institutions. The organization has the authority to accredit business, accounting and other business related degree programs. This is especially important for universities that have degree programs that do not directly come under the common business administration category. <http://www.humanresourcesmba.net/faq/what-is-the-acbsp/>
